

PILGRIMS FLOCK TO DEWEY SHRINE

Only Storm Serves to Check Stream of Visitors to Tomb.

UNDER WANTLE OF SNOW

Wreath From President Placed Inside Vault With Piece From Mrs. Dewey.

Arlington, where sleep most of the nation's heroes, early today was the scene of hundreds of persons unable to attend the obsequies of yesterday when the body of Admiral Dewey was laid to rest, and who took the opportunity to view and admire the floral offerings.

The snowstorm drove visitors to shelter and in a few minutes mantled the floral pieces grouped about the vault in a white blanket. Automobiles, street cars, and sight-seeing cars took visitors to the national cemetery throughout the day. Beginning early in the forenoon, when four special trains from New York bearing excursionists rolled into Washington, a constant stream of persons poured across the bridge into Virginia to the cemetery.

Mrs. Dewey III. Mrs. Dewey, who suffered a nervous breakdown following the death of the Admiral, is still confined to her rooms at the K street residence. With her is George Dewey, the son. Visitors are not permitted to call today, because of the widow's condition, and naval attaches are on duty at the home to notify callers to this effect.

It had been anticipated that Mrs. Dewey might visit the vault containing the body of the Admiral today, but her condition together with the uncertainty of the weather, prevented this.

Beautiful Floral Pieces.

The high esteem in which the nation held Admiral Dewey, was illustrated by the floral offerings. In beauty and number, the pieces were greater than any yet carried to Arlington and banked about a grave or vault of any of the thousands laid to rest there.

Seven truck loads of flowers were placed in the Capitol preceding the funeral services, and later were transferred to Arlington, and placed about the vault.

But two wreaths were placed inside the vault, one being the orchid offering from the president, and the other from Mrs. Dewey.

In Crescent Shape. The floral pieces were arranged in the shape of a crescent on either side of the tomb, the mammoth piece from the Atlantic Fleet occupying a prominent position.

The General Nelson A. Miles vault, the temporary resting place for the Admiral's body, is about a mile south of the Port Myer gate. On entering the cemetery at the army post gates, road leading to the south goes directly to the tomb, which is opposite Port McPherson.

TO DISCUSS CITY BEAUTIFUL

Society of Fine Arts to Meet Here Early Next Month.

The Washington Society of Fine Arts will meet February 8, at Central High School, to discuss the artistic development of Washington.

Secretary of War Baker, Col. W. W. Harris, Congressman James L. Sinden, and Commissioner Newman will speak. Special invitations have been sent to members of the Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce, Retail Merchants' Association and other organizations.

CENTRAL TO TEACH PRINTING.

A practical course in printing will be offered to the students at Central High School, beginning with the February term. The course will be given under the direction of E. W. Lawrence, who has had considerable experience at the Smallwood Vocational School.

The new plant, which is large enough for eighty pupils, has been fitted up with three presses and everything necessary for a practical printing.

WELTON, Ariz., Jan. 21.—A weary party of rescuers is carrying Lieutenant Colonel Bishop, army aviator, across a muddy desert on a stretcher. They are expected to reach here some time today. Army medical authorities believe because of the slow progress being made Bishop's weakness must be extreme.

W. F. Gamble, a member of the expedition that found Bishop lying prone on the sands, arrived in Welton last night. He said he met the ambulance party crawling through the sand on their way to the rescue. Because of the rough nature of the country, he believes, the ambulance will have to be abandoned about ten miles from Bishop's camp, and the return trip to the conveyance made with the officer in a stretcher.

Would Have Perished. "When we found Bishop," Gamble declared "he was unable to move. He had struggled along on his hands and knees till his legs were black and swollen. He certainly would have perished before morning had he not been found. One night we passed in heavy rain, but members of the party removed their coats to make a bed for Bishop. He was so weak that he could scarcely talk."

"We had met Robertson earlier and he directed us to Bishop. Robertson, when we found him, was staggering along crying for water, and was so nearly on the verge of a complete collapse, that we had to take the utmost precautions in bringing him around."

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Jan. 21.—A gaunt man stepped from the Santa Fe train when it pulled in here last night, and, tottering across the platform, saluted a group of officers.

He was Lieut. William A. Robertson, Jr., miraculously saved from death on the desert. The natty uniform he wore when he and his superior officer started on their flight January 10 was in rags. His cheeks were hollow, and his appearance told better than words the horrible experiences of the last week on the desert.

Officers of the army aviation corps kept newspapermen away and solicited assistance Robertson into a waiting automobile. Until Bishop makes his report, army men declared last night, the most dramatic story of army aviation history will remain untold.

As far as is known, Robertson has so far refused to divulge the purpose of the flight into Mexico that ended so disastrously. As soon as Bishop recovers, it was said here, an investigation of the flight will probably be launched.

War Department officials here said the question of a probe is up to the Western department, with headquarters at San Francisco, unless it can be shown that the department of the West was negligent or exceeded their powers in the alleged permission for the flight.

DRILL TICKETS EXHAUSTED. No more tickets for the drill Friday at Fort Myer are to be issued, the entire quota having been distributed. Tickets for the drill February 9 will be distributed beginning February 1, to be obtained upon written application to "the adjutant."
